Quinton,

As you know, I am a progressive Israeli-American, and I've been a Cambridge resident since 2009. I live in Central Square, work at Google, am a member of Temple Beth Shalom, and send my children to Cambridge public schools.

When I lived in Israel, I voted for left-wing parties, and I want to see Israelis and Palestinians live peacefully in two states, side by side. I also want to make sure that progressives in America are supporting Israelis and Palestinians who are working toward this future, including the left-wing Israelis who are currently struggling to overcome attacks by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and his far-right government.

I am ideologically opposed to BDS because it does not distinguish between legitimate opposition to the Israeli occupation of the Palestinian territories and opposition to Israel's existence. In its quest to silence domestic and international criticism of the occupation, the far-right Israeli government has waged a campaign to smear all legitimate criticism as being motivated by the anti-Israel ideology of BDS. I know that this is ridiculous, since I am a progressive Israeli who opposes the occupation and also opposes BDS. But Netanyahu and his allies have used BDS to fear-monger for votes, to the detriment of progressive anti-occupation Israelis and their supporters, like me, in America.

If we truly want to stand with progressives in Israel and resist the far-right policies of the Israeli government, we shouldn't play into their hands by passing this resolution and giving fuel to BDS. Instead, we should have a real conversation about what the Cambridge City Council can do to oppose the occupation and work for a peaceful future for Israelis and Palestinians.

Thanks,
Steven Spitz
